ALBERT FICTOR'S BIRTHDAY.

The Heir Presumptive to the British Throne Attains his Majority.

London, Jan. 8.—The celebration of Prince Albert Victor's twenty-first birthday was by no means general in the metropolis. The houses of the Cariton and other uitra-aristocratic clubs were illuminated to-night, and so were the promises of many West End tradesmen who onjoy the patronage of the royal family and the court. Twenty towns voted addresses of congratulation to the heir presumptive, and in about the same number of blaces the said that it had been enarged that under the legislation of last year came from the Heir presumptive, and in about the same number of blaces the public school children were scantily regalact with burs and oranges.

In executive session the Senators discussed for more than two hours Mr. Conger's resolution to make public the text of the Nicaraguan treaty. Mr. Conger argued that the psouls had the right to know and to influence the Senate's action conserning a project which involved an enormous expenditure of money, and Senater Edmunds held that the Senate had the constitutional power to deal with treaties unencumtered by outside advice or influence. Other Senators said that if any Senator's opinions were known in advance, agents of foreign Governments might try to influence them through their constituents. Mr. Morann finally put an end to the movement to have the Nicaragua treaty discussed in public by announcing that the State Department still held back important secret information that could not be disclosed at this time.

Mr. Conger's resolution was lost by 12 to 40.

MONSIGNOR URALDUS DEATH.

There were a number of parlor cars and two ordinary passenger coaches on a train which left New York for Philadelphia at 7 passenger coaches was occupied in one way and another when the last boat arrived from New York. Among the people who came at the last moment was a flery and untamed-looking car, found every seat occupied by two men, and then burst into the next car impetuously. The air at once became redolent of rum. He cast his eye up and down on either side of the car and saw that every seat was occupied by parcels, luggage, feet, or the sprawing forms of passengers. One or two of the seats had been turned, and one gray-haired man, who had a specially lank complement of legs, succeeded in occupying two benches by dint of stretching himself out like an octopus, and lagendously filling in the spaces not the interest of the seats had been bits of integrage. The frishman directed toward him a gaire of unusual ferceity. He waiked the long length of the car twice, but the passenger carefully avoided his gazo. Apparently, they were all sheaping servency. the next ear, and remarked, with an air of philosophical observation.

Though denti seem to realize that this here is second class. It is just the same, and the first-class ears are in the rear. The second-class champs which is now occupying the sates pairs on types as many larga as the first-class ladies and gintlemen behind us. That is because they are not first-class ladies and gintlemen behind us. That is because they are not first-class ladies and gintlemen themselves, but simply second-class champs.

A stonce of several minutes followed this speech, which was finally broken by two or three men woring toward the corners of their seats and bacing their bags and satchels on the floor. Then the voice of the man in the rear cose again above the hum of the whoels.

"There is no hog like an old hex," he remarked, seatenticust." A man would think that a gray beard and baid head would go along with wisdom and experience but it ain talways the case. There is baid-headed men in this worid wno would it give a man a lift to save their sowis, though their own business may be saving sowis. Any baid-headed man with a gray beard who will wear a preacher's colles and occupy four seats in a secondiciase car, while working men are standin up, is a area, fat, beyer-edied hig."

The gray-haired man who occupied the two benches and who were the habilinents of a clergyman rose here, looking very red in the face, and hurried forward into the smoking ear. A moment later he came back, followed by the brakeman, who were the usual easy-ging, nonchalant and blass expression of a man of his enling.

This man, souttered the dergyman, angrily, pointing to the red-headed frishman.

This been indusing in the grossest sort of personal abuse toward the passencers in this car, directing the book of it toward me."

The brakeman divod down into the inner recesses of inscioning a few general remarks about the hogs that trave on this road, and occupy four seats when they only have a right to occupy one.

"Your frind, the praist there,"
The brakeman ginneed down, turned the forward seat back into its proper form, tossed the clergyman's bundles on the rear seat, and then said to that gentleman;
"You're rearries." "You're travelling on a free pass, anyhow, aren't you? Yes? Now, you behave yourself just exactly as if you were paying your fare, will you? That's all the read asks of you."

MR. JAMES PARTON REPUTED.

The Hon. Jefferson Davis Replies to the Ac-ensation that he Colled Dr. Franklin a Mean, Hard, Calculating, Angular Yankee

Our Northern brethren will not let Mr. Davis alone in peace, in his quiet home on the shore of the Guif. They keep picking and pecking at him, and, as a general rule, seem to prefer to avoid the truth in what they say about him. The latest misrepresentation inext to Gen. Sherman's to which he has been subjected comes from a writer of Yaukee books. Mr. James Parion, of medium trients and acquirements, and of considerable notoriety at the North. He is the author of a number of blographies of distinguished Americans, among them Aaron Burr and Andrew Jackson. With a facetious from a well-defined the American Plutarch. Recently Mr. Parton has brought out a pretentious volume, printed by John B. Alden of New York, under the name of "Cyclopædia of Biography," consisting of more than a hundred brief sketches of eminent men of all ages and countries. Among these is one of Dr. Benjamin Franklin, the Hustrious patriot and philosopher of the Revolution, who is one of the comparatively few Americans whose names will go down to a very remote posterity. This sketch Mr. Parton was pleased to onen-page 128-in the following sensational style:

"Was Benjamin Franklin mean! Jefferson Davis thins he was." He is reported to have said recently thins he was." He is reported to have said recently thins he was." He is reported to have said recently thins he was." He is reported to have said recently thins he was." He is reported to have said recently thins he was." He is reported to have said recently the man of the comparative of the said th From the Lynchitung News. "Was Berjamin Franklin mean! Jefferson Davis thinks he was." He is reported to have said, recently, that Dr. Franklin was. "the invariation of the New Eng-land character—hard, calculating appuirs, unable to conneive any higher object than the accumulation of money."

Mr. Parton does not give his authority for this most wanton and preposterous calumny, carrying the brand of falsehood on its very face. How could a enlivated and refined gentleman like Mr. Davis, confessedly one of the best-informed men of the age, and perfectly familiar with the life and character of Dr. Franklin, pronounce him unable "to conceive any higher object than the accumulation of money?" A moment's reflection, if he had been a philosophical historian or an impartial and truthful blographer, or even a man of common sense, would have convinced Mr. Parton that Mr. Davis could not bave thought or said that Dr. Franklin was a low, "mean," sorted that the accumulation of money."

A life given to statesmanship, science, philosophy, and patriotic devotion to country was entitled to no such characterization.

But we have the proof positive that Mr. Davis has been egregiously misrepresented in this matter, as he is in most things that are said of him by Northern writers or spenkers. A Virginian, Mr. C. C. Baldwin of Bockheidge country Mr. Parton does not give his authority for matter, as he is in most things that are said of him by Northern writers or speakers. A Vir-ginian, Mr. C. C. Baldwin of Backbridge coun-ty believing the quotation attributed to Mr. Davis to be false, wrote to him on the subject, calling attention to the matter and be promptly rop ied in the following dignified letter, effect-native rushing the calumny. Mr. Baldwin has favored us with it for publication: MR. DATE TO ME EXIDER.

HASTENED BY WORRY.

The Benth of State Treasurer George M. Wright of New Jersey.

TRENTON, Jan. 8 .- George M. Wright, Treasurer of the State of New Jersey, who died after a long illness at his home in Bordentown this morning, was born in Rhode Island in 1817, and lived for several years in Otsego county, N. Y., and in New York city, where he was agent for the Aspinwall line of steamers. and was connected with other shipping enterprises. He came to New Jersey thirty-two years ago, and since then has been interested in the Camden and Amboy Ballroad and canal lines, acquiring considerable wealth. He was a leading man in the disastrous Pennsylvants. Slatington and New England Raifroad enterprise. Worry over losses in this together with the shock of the death of Gen. Gershom Mott, his next-door neighbor and most intimate friend caused his death. He was Mayor of Bordentown two years, Senator from Burlington county three years, and State Teasurer nine years. His third term in the latter office was about expiring and he was a candidate for reclection. His successor will be chosen by the Lexislature, which meets next week. Meantime the Trensurer's office is closed and the clerks are closing up the books. Col. John J Toffey of Jersey City has been the only candidate against Mr. Wright, but his chances are rather hurt than helped by the death of the latter, as a number of men who were under obligation not to enter the contest against Wright will now be candidates. in the Camden and Amboy Railroad and canal

SUING NEW YORK BROKERS.

The Receiver of Warner's Bank at Albion Would Like $300,000.

Receiver Henry J. Anderson of the First National Bank of Albion, N. Y., has begun suits in the United States Circuit Court here to recover $250,000 from Kissam, Whitney & Washburn, bankers, of 11 Broad street, and $50,000 from Chase & Atkins, formerly brokers.

The suits are brought through the Hon, Richard Crowley's law firm. Mr. Crowley assisted Receiver Anderson in the investigation of the Receiver Anderson in the investigation of the bank's affairs and in the discovery that Athert S. Warner, first cashier and atterward President of the bank had lost its money in Wall street speculation. It is alleged that at various times from March, 1880, to July last Warner, under his authority as eashier and Tresident, deposited large sums of the bank's money with the defendants for the purpose of purchasing speculative stocks on marches. He is now a fugitive from justice, his wherenhours being unknown. In addition to his pseulations from the bank, Warner used and squan-lered the moneys belonging to the estate of loswell S. liurrows, deceased, a resident of Alvion, for which he was acting as managing executor.
